Agriculture Secretary Honors 300-Year-Old Chester County Farm
During 2024 PA Farm Show

Farms in Lehigh, Montgomery, Perry, Union Counties Named Centennial and Bicentennial Farms

Harrisburg, PA – Today at the Pennsylvania Farm Show, Agriculture Secretary Russell Redding honored six families whose farms had been in the same family for more than 100 years. Among the farms recognized was Robert F. Cochran’s Chester County farm, only the second in the state to reach the Tricentennial Farm milestone. Other farms recognized were in Lehigh, Montgomery, Perry, and Union counties.

“These families represent the best in Pennsylvania agriculture,” Secretary Redding said. “Reflecting the 2024 Farm Show theme, Connecting Our Communities, they have been uniting and feeding our communities for generations. They are connecting future generations to their legacy.”

Since the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture started the Century Farm program in 1977 and the Bicentennial Farm program in 2004, over 2,300 Century and Bicentennial Farms have received the honor.

Farms recognized today include:

Chester County

Robert F. Cochran, Jr., Cochranville, established 1724

In a town named after their family, Robert Cochran’s family farm endures as a significant tribute to 300 years of local history. Today, 120 acres of the original farm remain in the Cochran family, who preserved the farmland in 2003, ensuring that the farm will remain a farm and not be sold to developers.

Perry County

James William Stambaugh, Elliotsburg, established 1788

Initially purchased for 800 British pounds, the Stambaugh’s 236-year-old family farm includes the original farmhouse, barn, springhouse, and wash house.

Perry County

Linda K. Smith-Gutshall-Young, Loysville, established 1794

Ten generations after the first purchase of farmland, Linda Smith-Gutshall-Young 's family raises goats and turkeys on 113 acres of the original plot.

Union County

Bret & Mary Moyer, Winfield, established 1797

Bret Moyer's six times great grandfather, a second lieutenant in the Revolutionary War, purchased 117 acres of farmland, 100 of which are still in use today.

Montgomery County

Scott & Sharon Melanson, Telford, established 1922

The Melanson family preserved all 52 original acres of their century farm in 2020. They grow corn, soybeans, and pumpkins.

Lehigh County

Klusaritz Family Farm, Slatington, established 1923

In addition to farming 65.8 of the original 75 acres of their farm, the Klusartiz family maintain many of the 100-year-old buildings for their hay and straw operation.

Farms owned by the same family for at least 100 consecutive years are eligible to be named a Pennsylvania Century Farm. A family member must live on the farm, and the property must include at least 10 acres of the original farm or earn more than $1,000 annually from sales of farm products.
